

Corrigendum

Matocq, M., and E. Lacey. 2025. Editorial. Keep running your traplines: Celebrating the contributions of Jim and Carol Patton to the science and people of mammalogy. Therya 16:1-4.

Editorial

Keep running your traplines: Celebrating the contributions of Jim and Carol Patton to the science and people of mammalogy

MARJORIE MATOCQ¹, AND EILEEN LACEY²

¹Natural Resources and Environmental Science, University of Nevada at Reno. 1664 N. Virginia Street, Reno, NV 89557. USA. E-mail: mmatocq@unr.edu (MM).

²Museum of Vertebrate Zoology, University of California. 3101 Valley Life Sciences Building, Berkeley, CA 94720. USA. E-mail: ealacey@berkeley.edu (EL).

Change in:

Caption in Figure 3.

Figure 3. Jim and Carol Patton checking traps near Shoshone, California in December 2024. Photo: Patrick Kelly.

Caption in Figure 5.

Figure 5. Jim greeting a recently captured woodrat near Shoshone, California in December 2024. This familiarity with organisms and their natural environments is the most fundamental component of evolutionary studies. Photo: Patrick Kelly.

